
ballykelly MAN of the meeting?

Posted by TheToecutter - 2008/07/19 23:48

Anyone else think that if you win 3 races in one day and come second in your other race you should be given the man of the meeting award?

Nigel Percy won both 125 races and one of the 250 races, coming second in the other 250 race and was overlooked for the man of the meeting award at today's Ballykelly ISB round organised by the Coleraine club

The award was decided by one of our local hacks whom I have a great deal of time for but I think he got it wrong today. He gave the award to the Mar-Train team whose two riders won both superbike and 600 races, a great feat in itself but those riders only won 2 races each, whereas young Percy won 3 and came damn close to making it 4.

Man of the meeting awards are what they say, a personal achievement of a singular individual at a race meeting, not a team award, that's what team of the meeting awards are for and if there isn't one of those then, sorry, good result but no team award today.

Always remember Mr Journo, 3 is better than 2.

Re:ballykelly MAN of the meeting?

Posted by james - 2008/07/20 12:09

superbike and 600 riders always win. 125 and 250 men never get a look in same as bsb. well done to Nigel...

Re:ballykelly MAN of the meeting?

Posted by Irish Racer - 2008/08/10 23:51

I think if you look at the history books a certain Mr Percy won our award last year. I wasn't there and didn't pick the winner so I'm not in a position to get involved in this year's debate but what I do know is this – there is no win rate criteria for the award. Our man at the races has total control and picks who he thinks did the best job. This year he picked the Mar-Train team. I can understand your frustration, but when so many riders have a good day it's a difficult decision to make.

Re:ballykelly MAN of the meeting?

Posted by rustnuts - 2008/08/13 08:21

percy for defo should have got man of the meeting
